

Coronavirus Update

Our firm is dedicated to the health, safety and well-being of our clients and employees. Our office is following the State Bar of Texas and CDC guidelines for control and prevention to help manage the spread of the virus. We will be working remotely until March 31, 2020, but we are fully committed and prepared to help our clients succeed in their parenting efforts and protect their financial interests during this time of financial volatility.

We will continue to provide seamless services to new and existing clients while ensuring the well-being of your families and our Coffey Haynes families. We continue to work diligently on your legal matters as we do every day. All of our attorneys and paralegals are equipped to work securely and remotely from home. You can email or call our firm, and at the discretion of each individual attorney, will facilitate an in-person meeting if necessary.

At this time, most Texas Courts have continued all non-essential hearings which most likely means that your hearing has been cancelled and rescheduled. At this time, meditations and hearings after April 1, 2020 are still proceeding as scheduled. We will continue to contact you directly regarding updates on your case or if you have an "essential" hearing according to the rules published by the Courts. Our attorneys will continue to make in-person court appearances as required.

To our colleagues, clients and friends who refer their friends and loved ones, we are continuing to schedule consultations and advocate for our clients. Please feel free to contact us if you have questions about your case specifically. Thank you for your understanding and patience during this time.
